

This part of the presentation introduces best practices, guidelines for classification management, maintenance, how they can be structured and modelled, and how classifications can be accessed in databases. We will consider both practical and methodological aspects of conducting establishment surveys by product and by industry. On the practical side, this includes the availability of business register sampling frames, respondent burden, and data collection costs. On the methodological side, this includes a look at which survey types are best suited for measuring prices, output, and productivity.