

Ohlsson (1996, JOS) introduced cross-classified sampling with an application to the Swedish Consumer Price Index. This paper discusses its use in a survey of pharmacies. The basic idea is that the population is defined by a cross-classification of establishments (e.g. pharmacies) by products (e.g. medicines) and that establishments and products are sampled independently. Aspects of design and estimation will be discussed.